One of the most common practices for control of S. multistriatus is sanitary removal of infested elm trees in late autumn (Maksimovic and Motal, 1983). This method, combined with treatment of stumps and branches with insecticide, decreases the death rate of elms (Barger, 1977; Basset et al., 1992). Healthy trees can also be protected with insecticidal sprays, and pheromones can be used to detect ...
